Forbes Launches New Congressional Website

Washington, D.C. – Congressman J. Randy Forbes (VA-04) announces that he has launched a new congressional website for his constituents of the Fourth District of Virginia.

“The Internet is a fantastic tool for learning and gathering information,” Forbes said. “My new website offers online visitors information about Virginia’s Fourth District, how to contact one of my four congressional offices, and how I can help my constituents with their concerns and needs.”

Forbes, first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in June 2001 in a special election, decided to overhaul his website to ensure that his constituents would be able to access the most up-to-date information about what is happening in Washington and in the Fourth District.

Forbes’ website can be accessed at <http://www.house.gov/forbes>. One of the site’s new features is a map that allows visitors to access information about various localities within the Fourth District.

“With the click of the mouse, visitors to my website can find information on local government and schools, as well as information about history, geography and tourism throughout the entire Commonwealth of Virginia.”

In addition, constituents can download forms to receive assistance on a particular problem related to federal government service, request a meeting with Congressman Forbes, apply for federal grant assistance, or order an American flag.

“I hope all who visit my new website find it helpful and informative.”
